1. Introduction

1.1 Two Stage Bidding

A two-stage bidding process is a procurement method commonly used in construction and other industries. It involves two distinct stages:

Qualification Stage: In the first stage, interested bidders submit their qualifications, experience, financial stability, and other relevant information. The client or project owner evaluates these submissions and shortlists a select group of qualified bidders.

Bid Stage: Only the pre-qualified bidders from the first stage are invited to participate in the second stage. At this point, the shortlisted bidders are provided with detailed project specifications, drawings, and other relevant information. They then submit their final bids based on this detailed information.

The two-stage process allows for a more efficient and focused approach. It ensures that only qualified and capable bidders invest time and resources in preparing detailed bids. This can save both the client and the bidder's time and resources compared to a single-stage process where all interested parties submit detailed bids initially.

The two-stage bidding process is often used in complex projects where the client wants to ensure that bidders have the necessary qualifications before they invest in the preparation of detailed bids.

Note: If the BOQ is uploaded during Stage 1 of the Tender creation process, bidders can download the BOQ, but they are unable to submit their quotes in Stage 1. Additionally, in Stage 2 Tender creation process, the option to upload the BOQ will not be available. If the BOQ is not uploaded in Stage 1, it can be uploaded during Stage 2 of the Tender Creation process.
